

CRUISE SHIP LOCATIONS 12 SEPTEMBER 2021

Compiled by Mike Pryce, Wellington NZ

(Information believed correct at this date. Compiled from various sources and internet AIS, especially www.cruisemapper.com. Excludes ferries and cruise ferries.

Many cruise ships have been in “warm” lay-up, when they have periodically moved from their berths or anchorages and gone for short voyages locally to give their engines and equipment “a run”, and including production of freshwater, before returning to lay-up. Ships at anchor periodically need to berth to take onboard fuel, food, provisions and other supplies.

Some cruise ships have been in lay-up for 18 months, as the initial “pause” was continually extended due to more Covid-19 outbreaks, and many financial assumptions made on the expectation of an initial two-months lockdown were reviewed. This resulted in some sales of older ships, and limited cruising in the Mediterranean and Europe,

The largest number of cruised ships were laid up on the Great Bahamas Banks, but many returned to service. A few cruise ships are anchored off the south coast of England, west of Southampton.

During the northern summer, and with various Covid-19 vaccination programmes implemented, many cruise ships operated short cruises, or “cruises to nowhere” in Europe, North America and Caribbean, with few or no port calls. There are many signs of a cruising “restart”, but with the ending of the northern summer, many are likely to return to lay up, as the usual cruises to the southern hemisphere are likely to be few. However, there still remain a few worrying Covid-19 infections of fully vaccinated passengers or crew, especially with the Delta and Mu variations of Covid-19.

Updates and advice of corrections always welcome. My e-mail: pryce@xtra.co.nz
